

Creating, Licensing, and Publishing OER Discussion Prompts

Learning from Examples

You most likely have used OER in some way in your teaching, learning, research and/or practice. Even if you have never created OER, there is value in sharing what OER you have used, and why they worked (or did not) within your specific scenario.

Share your OER story by responding to these questions:

- What OER have you found most useful in the past?
- What lessons can you take away from these examples as you create your own OER?

Raising Concerns

As you have progressed through this course, you have learned about the affordances that open licenses bring. At the same time, you may have concerns about what it means to create and share new content that is open and accessible to all.

Share your thoughts on sharing original content by responding to these questions:

- What are some concerns about sharing original content openly?
- How might you address or respond to these concerns?

The Benefits of Sharing

From cost savings and accessibility for all, to ease of use and repurposing, there are many benefits to openly sharing new OER.

- What do you see as the greatest benefits of sharing original content openly?

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.

